This fact was made known last night when S. Z. Poli announced that he had decided to spend $10,000 in refurnishing, redecorating, recarpeting and thoroughly renovating the big Avenue stock house. Some weeks ago Mr. Poli announced that his stock company would run all summer, it being his idea at that time to spend a few hundred dollars in redecorating. Since then, however, he has secured the stock rights to a number of spectacular productions, which he intends to offer next season, and he found that an adequate presentation of these plays on the present Poli stage would be impractical.

What orders in the American markets fill a big space in the public eye. The immense purchases being made and projected in the United States by the warring nations of the day. There are many angles to this question, but the weight of testimony of the industrial interests of the country is that the war orders came as a great relief as well as a revelation of our latent powers.

After collecting and collating the opinions of many important American opinions of many important American manufacturers, the Engineering Magamanufacturers, the Engineering Magazine says:

At the outbreak of the war it appeared as if the United States was going to have to play the proverbial role of the innocent bystander and suffer severely for the acts of others. This happilly is no longer the situation. The initial properties in the property is substant to the innocent paralysis of exports has been largely overrome in all lines and in some has yielded to a strenuous straining that their full extent and significance is only just beginning to be appreciated. It is not too much to say that the foreign shipments of arms, ammunition and supplies have saved the country from a serious industrial depression: one indeed would hold that they have rescued it from a seriod of genuine hard times already existing. There has not yet been published any aumning up of these effects in all lines of industrial stunction so confused and complex, and especially one so rapidly changing. The influence on our manufacturing industries, both immediae and ultimate, is a matter of especial observity and especial interest.

Clearly it is not alone the ammunition manufacturer in the United States who is profiting by European war orders. The buying has given an impulse to nearly every line, if not every line of trade. Evidence of this is found in the fact that some of the war supplies loaded at New York for European ports in one week were as follows: Automobiles, aeroplanes, small cannoh, motor trucks, tractors, road rollers, horses, copper cathodes, horseshoes, automobile tires, wire (copper, steel and barbed), projectiles (loaded), cartridges (loaded), cartridges (unloaded), small arms, military equipment, beef, shoes, machinery, flour, sugar, lubricating oil, oxide zinc, acetic acid, ammonia, leather, cotton lint, cotton and hay.

The war's demand on all forms of food for man and beast is making itself felt and the cloth mills, clothing said to be feeling and responding to the stimulating pressure of war orders. The Wall Street Journal calculated that up to the middle of May $500,000,-000 worth of military supplies had been ordered, and the term "war orders" is to be taken as applying only to the purchase of arms and ammunition from

It is an element of supreme importance in the manufacture of explosives, being obtained from coal tar, a byproduct of coke manufacture, and furnishes the picric acid of which the picric acid powders are made. Lieut: Hess to Attend to Aching

Teeth at Alaskan Forts. The War Department has just or dered Lieut. John H. Hess, dental surgeon, to make the rounds of the forts in Alaska and to plug up all military teeth that need plugging—and a whole lot of them need plugging, it is said, after a winter of hardtacl Over the Washington-Alaska military cable and by letter have come reports for many weeks that a lot of the United States soldiers of the Alaska forts have aching teeth, with the indorsement to the effect that a soldier with a toothache wasn't of much strategic importance.

But the dental surgeon is on the job now and everything is all right, which is simply another illustration of the manner in which a paternal government cares for its children in olive drab. Not a single tooth escapes the eagle eye of the War Department, although sometimes the boys in olive drab who get a toothache in Alaska in the early winter and keep it until the summer thaw sometimes, it is rumored, are somewhat skeptical on this point.
